

Donating Your Family History Collection

Contact genealogical or historical societies or libraries AHEAD of time to find out what they accept of donated papers and if they might be interested in your collection of either researched families or original documents or photos.

> Make a list of societies that are important to your family history and what items might be directed their way.

> There may be tax deductions in these gifts and finding a home in a temperature controlled library might be better than the garage of a child who is not interested or not situated to care for Grandma's letters or Dad's military certificate.

> Include a $$ donation to the society or library to organize and distribute (some societies require $$ for organizing materials, shipping, appraisals, etc.).

> All donations will become the property of the library or society.

Sort through your materials, discard with caution, keep with a plan, and distribute with a vision to share, not bury your ancestor's stories.

1. Salt Lake City, Family History Library (see FamilySearch.org, donations for specific details)
By accepting a donation, FamilySearch is under no obligation to include the donation in FamilySearch's collection.
